

FIGHTING ELDER FINANCIAL ABUSE

Older adults are often the target of scams. Scammers are convincing, and their scams are designed to catch people off guard. Don't be ashamed if you think you or someone you know has been a victim of a scam – it can happen to anyone.

Common scams aimed at older adults include:

- Government impersonator scams, such as someone posing as a Medicare representative asking for account information
- Fake prize, sweepstakes, and lottery scams, in which you are asked to pay money or provide account information to claim winnings
- Computer tech support scams, in which a scammer tells you that your computer has a problem and wants you to pay for support services to fix it
- The grandparent scam, in which a caller pretends to be a grandchild or other relative in distress

What can you do?

- Don't give out sensitive personal information over the phone or in response to an email, social media post, or text message. Sensitive information includes your social security number, bank account information, credit card numbers, PINs, and passwords.
- Check incoming bills, including utility bills and credit card statements, for charges that you didn't authorize. Contact the utility provider, credit card company, or bank if you see any charges you don't recognize.
- Don't transfer money to a stranger or to someone over the phone. Similarly, never buy a gift card to pay someone over the phone. Once you transfer money or share the numbers on the back of a gift card, there's usually no way to get your money back.
- If someone is trying to scam you they may threaten you or pressure you to act immediately. If this happens to you, don't panic. Slow down and think about what the person is saying. If you suspect it's a scam end the call and talk to someone you trust.

One reason that scammers target older adults is that they are less likely to report suspected fraud.
